Duke University Press offers new options for e-Duke Journals Scholarly Collection, releases 2010 pricing

Duke University Press now offers two e-Duke Journals Scholarly Collection models to allow additional options for libraries.

The 2010 e-Duke Journals Scholarly Collection: Standard includes online access to 31 Duke humanities and social science journals. The 2010 e-Duke Journals Scholarly Collection: Expanded includes online access to the 31 titles in Standard as well as Comparative Literature, the Journal of Music Theory, Novel, and the Philosophical Review. The number of titles in the expanded collection is expected to increase from year to year as Duke University Press adds new titles. Both collections feature tiered discounting, deep discounts on print add-on subscriptions for collection subscribers, and access to current content and all available back content. Complete retrodigitized content is available for select titles.

“We want to address the needs and budgets of libraries by offering more flexible options,” says Kim Steinle, library relations manager at Duke University Press. “By offering both Standard and Expanded collections, we can give librarians the opportunity to choose what is best for their institutions.”

The collections are hosted by HighWire Press at dukejournals.org. Features on HighWire Press include COUNTER-compliant usage statistics, RSS feeds, table-of-contents alerting, and toll-free access across cited journals in HighWire’s collection.

2010 pricing information and a complete list of titles are available for download at dukeupress.edu/library. For more information about the e-Duke Journals Scholarly Collections and 2010 pricing, please contact edukecollection@dukeupress.edu.
